This is a large-format book in which the author uses footage of a Hurricane Irma-type storm to show how events are triggered. How and why a hurricane is formed is a well-known scientific phenomenon, but hurricanes are relatively rare in the Atlantic Ocean and yet they are no more or less frequent than they are in the Pacific Ocean. These vignettes consist of some 50 events from the 1980s through to the present. Hurricane Bonny, for example, caused several deaths in Florida. The author's presentation is lively and the clips are all familiar, and the book includes interviews with contributors. A good introduction to the science of hurricanes. Editorial Reviews Review "The script is very good, and he provides a good amount of scientific facts and answers to many questions about hurricanes.
